that they would not be able to get some of these items that they're asking for. So that's really...

SENATOR JANSSEN: Well, I think that was based on the current law, Senator.

SENATOR HILGERT: Okay.

SENATOR JANSSEN: And you have, you know, you have, which, the way the law is right now, after last year, you had the opportunity to pay the sales tax on this alcohol or wine, generally wine, but they chose not to, because we checked with the Department of Revenue and no one had paid any taxes.

SENATOR HILGERT: Okay.

SENATOR JANSSEN: So we've had this on the statutes for a year, and no one has come up...forward and said, oh, I bought $300 worth of wine; I owe...I owe so many dollars in sales tax. It hasn't happened. So we're going to have something that doesn't work? I think we need to...we need to recapture this money.

SENATOR HILGERT: I have no problem with...with taxing folks, and we should do that. Again, my impression was that the main objection and concern was the availability, not so much the taxes. In fact, I don't remember seeing any correspondence where these individuals were mailing in cases to these connoisseurs, if you will, that they were getting a few bottles here and a few bottles there, that type of thing.

SENATOR JANSSEN: Um-hum.

SENATOR HILGERT: So, I know you're a retailer, or not, you know, you're in the retail industry and you're used to thinking large sizes, like cases and kegs and slabs,...

SENATOR JANSSEN: Um-hum.

SENATOR HILGERT: ...stuff like that.
